

THE LIZARD OF THE LOIRE VALLES

Question asked of MARS: Andy, when you say that there are “The Thousand Faces on Mars,” do any of them rival The Face on Mars at Cydonia in terms of its size and complexity?

Andrew D. Basiago, president, Mars Anomaly Research Society (MARS): Yes. I would cite the find made this month by Pat Bullock Williams of The Lizard of the Loire Valles. She found this face on the rim of a crater photographed by the High Resolution Imaging Science Experiment (HiRIse), so it must be quite large. In addition, we can see eyes and teeth on the face of the lizard (top right) and, surrounding it, humanoid and cruciform objects (bottom right). This new complex shows that The Face on Mars at Cydonia is the rule and not the exception.

The Crater where Williams made Her Find of a Lizard’s Visage in the Loire Valles of Mars

The Lizard Face of the Loire Valles

A Close-up reveals Humanoid and Cruciform Objects atop this Surreal Work of Martian Art

Acknowledgments

MARS wishes to thank Pat Bullock Williams for sharing this significant discovery with us.